HISTORY COMMISSION

INTERNATIONAL WOMEN'S DAY

International Women's Day has its antecedents in the struggle of women to achieve their political, labor and reproductive rights during the last two hundred years. Feminism has marked contemporary history since the French Revolution, when the playwright Olympia de Gouges wrote her Declaration of the Rights of Women and Citizens (1791), to this day. At the Second International Conference of Socialist Women in Copenhagen (1910), the demand for universal suffrage for all women was reiterated and the International Working Women's Day was proclaimed.

At the First World Conference of Women of the Organization of the United Nations held in Mexico in 1975, it was suggested that March 8 commemorate International Women's Day, in memory of the group of textile workers that on March 8, 1857, took to the streets of New York to protest the adverse working conditions.

Different movements followed from that date. On March 15, 1908 New York was the scene of another strike by a group of women demanding equal pay, working day of 10 hours and time to breastfeed their children. During that strike, more than a hundred women were killed in the Sirtwoot Cotton factory, in a fire that was attributed to the owner of the factory in response to the strike.

Finally, in 1977, the UN made the official statement on 8 March as International Women's Day.

For its part, the Organization of American States (OAS) established the Inter-American Commission of Women (CIM) in 1928, which was the first inter-governmental instrument created to ensure the recognition of women's human rights. The CIM is composed of 34 delegates, one for each OAS Member State and has become the main forum for debate and policy formulation on women's rights and gender equality in the Americas.

In 2015, leaders around the world adopted the Sustainable Development Goals, placing gender equality and empowering women at the heart of Agenda 2030.

The theme for 2017 for International Women's Day is "Women in the changing world of work: planet 50-50 in 2030".

According to data from the World Economic Forum in Davos, in Latin America, the labor force participation of women has grown 33% since 1990 and 23 million women have joined the job market in the last 10 years.

Women are essential actors for development, with the power to influence the well-being of their communities.
