- APRIL 7TH
WORLD HEALTH DAY

In December 1945, the delegations of Brazil and China proposed the creation of an international health organization. In July 1946, the constitution of the World Health Organization (WHO) was approved in New York, United States. The WHO began its work on April 7th, 1948. This date is commemorated as World Health Day.

It has been a year since the Coronavirus reached America. The United States confirmed the first case on January 21, 2020, then Brazil confirmed its first case in São Paulo on February 26, and Mexico followed two days later. In March, most countries on the continent closed schools and airports, shut businesses and implemented a series of restrictions in order to control the pandemic.

COVID-19 has affected all countries, but its impact has been most severe in those communities that were already vulnerable, more exposed to diseases, less likely to have access to quality health care services, and more likely to experience adverse consequences as a result of measures implemented to contain the propagation of the virus.

Latin America and the Caribbean experienced, according to research by the International Monetary Fund, a contraction of 7.4% in 2020. Even as vaccines appear offering hope, 2021 began with outbreaks and fears for new variants, threatening the belief of a speedy recovery.

The “new normal” post-pandemic should be an opportunity to transform models of economic and social development while, at the same time, strengthen democracy, assuring human rights and maintaining peace, in line with the 2030 Agenda for Sustainable Development.

The Covid-19 pandemic offers historians new challenges and elements to be able to study this new stage in the history of humanity, since it is an event still in development that will be a challenge for professionals in our discipline.
